When Woodburn telegraphed from Washington to "nominate a winner" it was evident that he meant just what he said.

H. F. Bartine, of Ormsby, was the winner nominated at Winnemucca on Tuesday last.

Mr. Bartine did not go to Winnemucea as an aspirant for Congressional honors but a candidate for the Supreme Judgeship, it being supposed that Woodburn's friends would ask that he be tendered the Congressional nomination.

At Winnemucca there was a desire on the part of every one that he be nominated for Congress, some even holding that he was stronger than Woodburn. He declined to accept these overtures until he had won his Judgeship fight. He needed but a few votes to win when Judge Leonard was withdrawn from the fight and a sufficient number of votes tendered to Bartine to make his nomination

When this was accomplished he called his delegation together and thanking them for their fidelity to his interests, said :

"I have been charged with putting myself before my party. I wish to purge myself from that charge. I will accept the Congressional nomination and meet any man the democrats choose to nominate, in the Fall campaign.

"I did not feel in justice to my delegates that I could withdraw from the Judgship fight until now, nor can I rest under the imputation that I feared the result of a Congressional campaigo against George Cassidy."

The leading men of the Republican party were at his headquarters along with his delegation at the time and all heartily congratulated him on his bold, manly course.

All present saw the absolute necessity of placing a "winner" on the Congressional ticket at a time when the industries of the country need the protection of the Lower House of Congress.

The Judgeship fight meant an easy victory, coupled with high honors and large pecuniary emoluments for a term of six years.

The Congressional fight meant hard campaign, two years of office and small financial returns.

Yet when called upon to serve his State and his party he trampled self under foot and placed his energies and abilities at the disposal of his party and his State. His sacrifice in the interest of his party instantly made him recognized as a standard bearer, worthy to be trusted, and he was on all sides showered with congratula-

His splendid speech before the convention intensified the good impression he had made and there was but one opinion expressed;

"This is the winner,"

The editor of the APPEAL goes into details in this matter for the purpose of vindicating the Ormsby delegation from the charge circulat ed on the streets that it was put up in the interest of Leonard to throw Bartine overboard when certain men gave the signal.

The men who so industriously circulated these imputations of treachery at the expense of the delegation, manufactured them, but a good many believed them.

In justice to the delegation, of which the writer was one, this article is published.

-Harper's Weekly, just at hand, declares that the nomination of Blaine is the most probable result of the Chicago Convention. The Weekly, in that event, will of course support Cleveland, as it did in the last campaign, but it concedes that he will lose votes because of "the failure in civil service reform." Strange to say, it was because of Cleveland's professions in relation to civil service reform that the weekly surported him four years ago. At least it gave that as the reason. This Mugwump journal seems to like humbug better than anything else.
